I am basically OK re the suggestions re intensification, design, set-backs etc. However, 1} no where do you mention house/roof colour to reflect sunlight back .. to stop further absorption of heat. Black/dark grey seems to be the fashion recently and this is the reverse of what is needed. Or solar panels on roofs wherever this would be sensible [facing North or West etc] Or water storage for gutters to barrels .. again where space allows. 2} no priority to adding more possible shop on ground level of a 3 floor building or kindergarten or Play Centre where the population increase should make this suitable. Perhaps some subsidy for folk who would like to use this option as part of their home. 3} no mention of increased bus routes or frequency [small vehicles, preferably electric] .. to service suburbs which otherwise would need cars to be used. and 4} I have no or little confidence that flood-prone areas as well as low-lying sea side areas are going to be left as sand-dune or park or wetland or wilderness. Uruhu shows how little your rhetoric is matched by practice.
